The Washington Post

WorldViews

Zika is triggering a surge in demand for abortions across Latin America, study says

By Max Bearak June 23 at 9:01 AM

Women in Zika-affected countries in Latin America are seeking help getting abortions in unprecedented numbers, according to a study published by the New England Journal of Medicine. The virus can cause birth defects in the babies of women who carry it, but abortions are illegal across much of the affected region. More than 1,500 babies have been born with microcephaly, a condition linked to Zika and typified by a small head and potential developmental problems.

The report derived its findings from information requests sent to a popular website for women seeking abortions, Women on Web. The website offers advice and also mails pregnancy-ending pills to women who can't otherwise get an abortion.

The researchers analyzed information requests from affected countries before and after the virus began spreading, as well as comparing those to countries where Zika hasn't been documented. They found that in Brazil, for instance, requests for abortion advice had doubled since health organizations began issuing grave alerts about the virus in November.

WorldViews newsletter

Important stories from around the world.

Sign up

Ecuador and Venezuela saw a similar doubling, while numerous Central American nations saw numbers rise, too, but more modestly. Uruguay and Chile, which haven't had any cases of Zika, did not see any increase. Abigail Aiken, an assistant professor from the University of Texas at Austin who worked on the study, told the BBC: "Accurate data on the choices pregnant women make in Latin America is hard to obtain. If anything, our approach may underestimate the impact of health warning on requests for abortion, as many women may have used an unsafe method or visited local underground providers."

Many women affected by Zika may not have access to the Internet and could not possibly be accounted for in the study.

In Brazil, Colombia, and Ecuador, abortions are illegal except in cases of health emergencies or rape. In Ecuador, that only applies to women who are mentally ill and who have been raped. In El Salvador, abortion is totally illegal, and women can serve jail time if convicted of having one.

Read More:

While Latin America struggles over Zika, Haiti faces epidemic with a shrug

Typical travel insurance won't cover you if you cancel trip because of Zika

Bipartisan talks on Zika virus break down ahead of July 4 recess

Max Bearak writes about foreign affairs for the Washington Post. Previously, he reported from South Asia for the New York Times and others. J Follow @maxbearak

The Post Recommends

Flu nose spray doesn't work for children; use shots instead, federal expert panel says

The recommendation could affect pediatricians and other vaccine providers for children who may have already placed orders for the coming season.

European newspapers ahead of British E.U. referendum: 'We love you'

Said one German paper.

Even C-SPAN isn't immune to being politicized

C-SPAN is more often accused of favoring conservatives, though.